

Milliken Floor Covering's parent company Milliken is one of the largest privately held companies in the world. Headquartered in South Carolina, USA, Milliken has design studios, showrooms and manufacturing facilities around the world to meet the global needs of their customers.

Milliken describe themselves as fuelled by innovation and committed to design. Their approach combines aesthetics with unique technologies to make floor coverings that are colourful, customisable, tougher, softer and more sustainable to ensure they meet all the needs of their customers.

The company takes its inspiration for its carpet tiles from all over the world. Recent collections have referenced sources ranging from graffiti street art to London's Clerkenwell area. The constant throughout their ranges is the attention to detail and the quality of their products.

Milliken produce carpets to appeal to everyone, whether you are looking for flooring inspired by watercolours and other art forms the artistry of hand-knit textures or brightly coloured stripes. The wide range of colours and patterns means that Milliken should have something to suit whatever space you are looking for.

Milliken has been looking for innovative ways to improve people's lives since 1865. As early as 1900 they were reusing packaging and textile materials and had their first recycling policy. More than a century later, those principles still guide them today. As a company they encourages innovation in product design, raw material selection, manufacturing operations and merchandising materials.
